2022 Recap & 2023 Outlook

Growth Sectors of 2022

What To Expect from 2023

Moving on to the Following Year

Foreword

As the year draws to a close, we take a moment to reflect on the events of 2022 and look ahead to what might await us in 2023. We have seen unprecedented growth in some sectors, while others have suffered greatly. Key influencers have been the Russia-Ukraine war and its economic fallout; China's role in disrupting global economic flow through restrictive closures that disrupted global supply chains; global inflation; Federal Reserve monetary tightening; and many others. Despite all of this, CM-Equity is proud to have successfully concluded 2022 and would like to thank our readership for following us through an exciting year.

The Best Performing Sectors of 2022

The year 2022 was a tumultuous one for the stock market, largely due to Federal Reserve rate hikes and inflation, as well as broader socio-economic factors. While most sectors experienced losses, particularly in technology, the energy sector was the notable outperformer due to the energy crisis caused by the Russia-Ukraine war, which sent energy prices soaring to new heights. Meanwhile, the utility sector and consumer staples managed to remain relatively buoyant. When looking at the broader picture, Stock Rover 2022 revealed that the technology sector (+381.90%), consumer cyclical sector (+181.40%), and healthcare sector (+34.20%) were the top three sectors that outperformed the S&P 500 index over the past ten years. On the other hand, the communication sector (-37%), consumer discretionary (-32.2%), and real estate (-25.8%) were the sectors that most drastically underperformed in comparison to the previous year. This can be largely attributed to the effects of the rising interest rates on high-debt sectors like real estate and telecommunications, as well as the decrease in consumer spending due to the overall economic climate.

What To Expect From 2023

"What can we expect from 2023?" With so much uncertainty in the world right now, it can be hard to anticipate what the next few years will bring. However, there are a few things that appear to be more likely than others.

Geopolitical tensions will most likely stay a hot topic in 2023 as they impact the economy in several ways. It can drag down consumer and business sentiment. It disrupts global supply chains, both because of potentially blocked shipping ports and also because of trade embargoes. Additionally, it necessitates increased government spending on the military, which shifts money away from productive areas such as, for instance, education, research, and infrastructure. Recent COVID-19 outbreaks have put China's supply chain in the spotlight once again, sparking concern that disruptions could fray the nerves of foreign investors further while weakening the country's competitiveness and accelerating diversification plans among multinationals. Recession uncertainties will remain an inescapable subject in 2023. According to the IMF's (International Monetary Fund) chief, one-third of the world economy will be in recession. There are several reasons for this, including the fact that the economies of the US, EU, and China are all slowing down at the same time.

Overall, 2023 will be a year of both uncertainty and opportunity. It is important to be prepared for whatever lies ahead. However, it is also important to take predictions with a grain of salt, as anything can happen between the beginning and the end of 2023.
